But what if you want to watch a French-Language movie? If you live in the UK, you can download any of the many movies (and shows) from online video serviceLovefilm, or you can purchase DVDs through Netflix.com, and stream them through Amazon Instant Video, Vudu, Google Play Movies, and many other streaming VODs. If you prefer to rent the movies from a Netflix, check out Netflix.com for a list of titles and pricing. Rentals are generally $1.99. The New Releases section on Netflix.com usually only lists a few current titles per week, but you can check the Previous Releases section to see what titles have been released in the past. Subscription rates vary depending on where you live and what type of TV package you have. Movie rental prices are based on the number of DVDs in your package. Internet connections that can support a Netflix account are usually less expensive, and they will provide more programming per month than cable providers. If you have multiple Netflix accounts on your TV, it's important to make sure that each account is using a different password. [edit] History [edit] In 1997, Netflix was founded by Marc Randolph, a technical executive at Netflix, Inc., and entrepreneur Reed Hastings. The business started in a small Palo Alto office that Hastings rented for $15 per month and grew into a multi-million-dollar company. Netflix was spun off from Sorenson Communications in December 1998, after which Hastings and Randolph worked together to build a small, second company, Netflix, Inc., in order to protect the brand name. [2] Netflix.com, created by Marc Randolph, launched on March 28, 1997. The site allowed viewers to use Netflix for free, with plans to charge fees in the future.[3] Netflix was originally based in Palo Alto, California, and had 75,000 subscribers by 1997.[4] In 1998, Hastings and Randolph moved to Los Gatos, California. Netflix.com was initially a directory that gave users a place to search for titles.[4] In 1999, Netflix began to enter into movie licensing agreements with studios.[4] In December of that year, Hastings founded a new company, Netflix, Inc., and took on a 82157476af
